Structure of Support

The wooden house represents the structure of support required for anyone dealing with terminal illness. Every stick is important to the structural integrity of the building. The colourful setting symbolises that with the proper support network even people who are terminally ill can lead cheerful and playful lives.

Balance

The marbling in this image is symbolic of the different types of care & support terminally ill people may require. Each coloured ink represent a different type of support. Medical, emotional, physical, psychological and so on. The mirroring of the image represents the balance of care that is needed to maintain each patients health and wellbeing.
